

An instance variable reserves memory for the data your class needs. Let's assume you want to add a place for a string or int variable. You can use an instance variable to reserve that memory for the lifetime of the object. Each object will receive unique memory for its variables.